When we arrived in New York City, our names changed almost immediately. At Immigration, the officer asked my father, Mister Elbures, if he had anything to declare. My father shook his head no, and we were waved through. I was too afraid we wouldn't be let in if I corrected the man's pronunciation, but I said our name to myself, opening my mouth wide for the organ blast of the a, trilling my tongue for the drumroll of the r, All-vah-rrr-es! How could anyone get Elbures out of that orchestra of sound?

At the hotel my mother was Missus Alburest, and I was little girl, as in, “Hey, little girl, stop riding the elevator up and down. It’s not a toy.”

When we moved into our new apartment building, the super called my father Mister Alberase, and the neighbors who became mother’s friends pronounced her name Jew-lee-ab instead of Hoo-lee-ab. I, her namesake, was known as Hoo-lee-tab at home. But at school I was Judy or Judish, and once an English teacher mistook me for Juliet.
It took a while to get used to my new names. I wondered if I shouldn’t correct my teachers and new friends. But my mother argued that it didn’t matter. “You know what your friend Shakespeare said, ‘A rose by any other name would smell as sweet.’” My family had gotten into the habit of calling any literary figure “my friend” because I had begun to write poems and stories in English class.

By the time I was in high school, I was a popular kid, and it showed in my name. Friends called me Jules or Hey Jude, and once a group of troublemaking friends my mother forbade me to hang out with called me Alcatraz. I was Hoo-lee-tab only to Mami and Papi and uncles and aunts who came over to eat sancocho on Sunday afternoons—old world folk whom I would just as soon go back to where they came from and leave me to pursue whatever mischief I wanted to in America. JUDY ALCATRAZ: the name on the wanted poster would read. Who would ever trace her to me?

My older sister had the hardest time getting an American name for herself because Mauricia did not translate into English. Ironically, although she had the most foreign-sounding name, she and I were the Americans in the family. We had been born in New York City when our parents had first tried immigration and then gone back “home,” too homesick to stay. My mother often told the story of how she had almost changed my sister’s name in the hospital.

After the delivery, Mami and some other new mothers were cooing over their new baby sons and daughters and exchanging names and weights and delivery stories. My mother was embarrassed among the Sallys and Janes and Georges and Johns to reveal the rich, noisy name of Mauricia, so when her turn came to brag, she gave her baby’s name as Maureen.

“Why’d ya give her an Irish name with so many pretty Spanish names to choose from?” one of the women asked her.

My mother blushed and admitted her baby’s real name to the group. Her mother-in-law had recently died, she apologized, and her husband had insisted that the first daughter be named after his mother, Mauran. My mother thought it the ugliest name she had ever heard, and she talked my father into what she believed was an improvement, a combination of Mauran and her own mother’s name, Felicia.

“Her name is Mao-ree-shee-ah,” my mother said to the group.

“Why, that’s a beautiful name,” the new mothers cried. “Moor-ee-sha, Moor-ee-sha,” they cooed into the pink blanket. Moor-ee-sha it was when

4. ‘A rose smell as sweet’: In Shakespeare’s Romeo and Juliet, the main characters’ families are enemies. But when Romeo and Juliet fall in love, Juliet uses almost these words to say that Romeo is precious to her no matter what his family name is.
6. Alcatraz (al’ka-traz’): the name of an island in San Francisco Bay that was once the site of a prison.
turned to the States eleven years later. Sometimes, American tongues I even that mispronunciation tough to say and called her Maria or ha or Maudy from her nickname Maury. I pitied her. What an awful to have to transport across borders!

Her little sister, Ana, had the easiest time of all. She was plain Anne—s, only her name was plain, for she turned out to be the pale, blond anic beauty” in the family. The only Hispanic-seeming thing about as the affectionate nicknames her boyfriends sometimes gave her. , or as one goofy guy used to sing to her to the tune of the banana isement, Anita Banana.

Her, during her college years in the late 60’s, there was a push to ounce Third World names correctly. I remember calling her long ice at her group house and a roommate answering.

“Can I speak to Ana?” I asked, pronouncing her name the American way. a?” The man’s voice hesitated. “Oh! You must mean Ah-nah!”

ur first few years in the States, though, ethnicity was not yet “in.” Those were the blond, blue-eyed, bobby-sock years of junior high hool school before the 60’s ushered in peasant blouses, hoop earrings, rs. My initial desire to be known by my correct Dominican name , I just wanted to be Judy and merge with the Sallies and Janes in ass. But, inevitably, my accent and coloring gave me away.

here are you from, Judy?”

ew York,” I told my classmates. After all, I had been born blocks at Columbia Presbyterian Hospital.

mean, originally.”

om the Caribbean,” I answered vaguely, for if I specified, no one was sure what continent our island was located on.

ally? I’ve been to Bermuda. We went last April for spring vacation. he worst sunburn! So, are you from Portoriko?”

, I shook my head. “From the Dominican Republic.”

here’s that?”

uth of Bermuda.”

y were just being curious, I knew, but I burned with shame er they singled me out as a “foreigner,” a rare, exotic friend.

y your name in Spanish, oh, please say it!” I had made mouths one day by rattling off my full name, which, according to Dominican n, included my middle names, Mother’s and Father’s surnames10 ir generations back.

1 World: from the developing nations of Latin America, Africa, and Asia.

2 ser (ser’sá’pěł) Spanish: long, blanketlike shawls.

ames: last names.
“Julia Altagracia María Teresa Álvarez Tavares Perello Espaillar Julia Pérez Rochet González.” I pronounced it slowly, a name as chaotic with sounds as a Middle Eastern bazaar or market day in a South American village.

I suffered most whenever my extended family attended school occasions. For my graduation, they all came, the whole noisy, foreign-looking lot of fat aunts in their dark mourning dresses and hair nets, uncles with full, droopy mustaches and baby-blue or salmon-colored suits and white pointy shoes and fedora hats, the many little cousins who snuck in without tickets. They sat in the first row in order to better understand the Americans’ fast-spoken English. But how could they listen when they were constantly speaking among themselves in florid-sounding phrases, rococo consonants, rich, rhyming vowels? Their loud voices carried.

Introducing them to my friends was a further trial to me. These relatives had such complicated names and there were so many of them, and their relationships to myself were so convoluted. There was my Tía Josefina, who was not really an aunt but a much older cousin. And her daughter, Aída Margarita, who was adopted, una hija de crianza.

My uncle of affection, Tío José, brought my madrina Tía Amelia and her comadre Tía Pilar. My friends rarely had more than their nuclear family to introduce, youthful, glamorous-looking couples (“Mom and Dad”) who skied and played tennis and took their kids for spring vacations to Bermuda.

After the commencement ceremony, my family waited outside in the parking lot while my friends and I signed yearbooks with nicknames which recalled our high school good times: “Beans” and “Pepperoni” and “Alcatraz.” We hugged and cried and promised to keep in touch.

Sometimes if our goodbyes went on too long, I heard my father’s voice calling out across the parking lot. “Hoo-lee-tahl! Vámonos!”

Back home, my tíos and tías and primas, Mami and Papi, and mis hermanas had a party for me with sancocho and a store-bought pudín, inscribed with Happy Graduation, Julie. There were many gifts—that was a plus to a large family! I got several wallets and a suitcase with my initials and a graduation charm from my godmother and money from my uncles. The biggest gift was a portable typewriter from my parents for writing my stories and poems.

Someday, the family predicted, my name would be well-known throughout the United States. I laughed to myself, wondering which one I would go by.

---

11. una hija de crianza (oo'nii e'hii de kre-an'sii) Spanish: a child raised as if one’s own.
12. My uncle of affection . . . Tía Pilar: My favorite uncle, Uncle José, brought my godmother Aunt Amelia and her close friend Aunt Pilar.
13. nuclear family: a family unit consisting of a mother, a father, and their children.
15. Back home . . . Julie: Back home, my uncles and aunts and cousins, Mami and Papi, and my sisters had a party for me with a stew and a store-bought pudding, inscribed with Happy Graduation, Julie.