Selecting Land and People

When Stephen F. Austin took over his father’s job of creating an Anglo colony in Texas, he was faced with two difficult tasks. The first of these tasks was to choose the site for his colony; the second was to select colonists that would be acceptable to the Spanish – and later, Mexican rulers.

As to the matter of choosing land, Austin could not simply take any land in Texas. He had to select a site that would appeal to the southern farmer type. The land he selected had to resemble in many ways, the lands with which these people were familiar. If the lands selected were radically different, colonists would be hard to find.

As to the matter of selecting colonists, Austin had to choose carefully. He was ultimately responsible for the people he was bringing in. Not only did he have to follow guidelines set down by the host country, but he also had to exercise a fair amount of judgment in determining the true character of those wishing to come.

In the following exercise, you will be placed in the role of Austin. In the first portion of the exercise, you will have to select a site for your colony; in the second, you will be selecting colonists. Remember to choose both carefully. Your future and the future of Texas are in your hands!
Letter from Zeke Johnson of Tennessee

Dear Josiah,

I heared tell that they was openin' up land fer settlin' in Texas. It shore sounded right nice if'n it were good land. I remember when my pa cleared the land. It were good land with rich soil and it weren't too far from the river. The problem was jist too danged many trees. Course I realize that a feller needs trees fer building hisself a home, but clearin deep forest were jist too hard. Why, it liked ta break my Pa's back a pulling all them stumps. Course, livin' in a forest, ya always had to worry about Injuns ahidin' in the woods. Woods was always good fer Injuns to hide in.

I hopes that the land in Texas is good fer farmin', but farmin' shore is a lot of hard work. Now, if'n some of the land were clear enough fer raisin' beef critters, then a man might be able to put a few gold pieces in his pocket. Here at home, there ain't enough land fer raisin' beef critters. They is jist too dang many trees an' neighbors.

Course, I been a thinkin' of some other way which a body might earn hisself a good keep. If'n they was a good sized river in that there Texas, then I reckon that I could maybe build a mill a some sort; you know, a corn grinding mill, or maybe even a sawmill. It might be kinda nice ta do somethin' different for a change.

Maybe that ther land in Texas is what I'm lookin' fer. Course, I heared tell they was all kinds a land in Texas, even deserts. If'n I was ta move ta Texas, I shore wouldn't want to live in no desert. I jist hopes the land that there Austin feller choose is jist what me an' the family been prayin' fer. I guess only time will tell.

Yours most respecktfully,

Zeke Johnson

Choosing Colonists Activity

THIS ACTIVITY WILL BE DONE AS A GROUP ACTIVITY IN CLASS

For your colony, not just anyone may be given land. The Spanish, and later the Mexican government, is looking for certain types of people to settle in Texas. Basically, they are looking for decent, law-abiding family men who will respect the laws of Spain. They should know something of farming or have a skill that will be useful to the colony. Men who own machinery that will be of use to the new colony are especially welcome. Settlers must also be Catholic or at least silent about any other religious beliefs.

There are several things to avoid. No people of low moral character should be accepted. People, who want land, but are not willing to stay and farm it, must be turned down. Remember, you are bringing people to settle, you aren’t just giving land away. The Spanish are also very sensitive to anyone who may have been linked with the U.S. army or government. They are not fond of filibusters, or their friends, for fear of their plots. They are also not fond of pure adventurers. As the Catholic faith is the main one in Mexico and Spanish Texas, they are sensitive to those who do not respect this fact. Remember, as an empresario, you are the one who, in the end, is responsible to the Spanish government. If your people go wrong, the authorities will blame YOU! CHOOSE WELL!
