1st Grade Poetry – Unit of Study

Big Ideas/Enduring Understandings

Genre Characteristics/Attributes
- Poetry is written differently than fiction or nonfiction
- Poets write about nature, common objects, and other details of the world around them
- Poetry doesn’t have to rhyme
- Writers write in the poetic format with line breaks and white space.
- May use using repeating lines, figurative language, alliteration, and onomatopoeia to create rhythmic pieces
- Some poems contain repeated words or phrases
- Some poems have unusual shapes
- Poets use descriptive words
- Some poems contain strong imagery

Craft
Poets: write about a variety of self-selected topics
use interesting word choice, illustrations, formats, and text sizes to engage the readers
- Paint a picture for the reader
- Use details to create vivid images
- Use poetic devices such as sensory images, personification
- Use precise descriptive language
- Make thoughtful decisions about form and line breaks to give poem shape, structure, and rhythm

Writing Process
- Poets write multiple rough drafts
- Poets revise and edit their writing
- Poets publish their writing using a variety of formats and media
- Poets reread writing often
- Creates illustrations that add to the appeal and clarity of the poem

Essential Questions

1. How will I choose what to write about?
2. What can I read that is like what I want to write?
3. How will I use mentor texts to guide my writing?
4. How will reading and discussing a poem’s characteristics help me write a poem?
5. What kinds of words and images will I choose that will help readers?
6. How will I “paint a picture” for the reader with my words?
7. How will my writing look different on the page (line breaks/white space)?
8. How will using line breaks help my reader read and understand my poetry better?
9. How will I use illustrations to make my poetry clearer?
10. What will I learn from reading and talking about my writing with others?
11. How can I use poetic devices such as sensory images and personification?
12. How can I use poetry to write about nature and common objects?

Poetry is a particularly accessible genre for K-1 students as our young learners already think and speak in poetry. Students at this age are natural poets, observing the world around them with wonder and awe. Their receptivity to the music and descriptiveness of this genre is infectious. Your young writers will attempt to emulate the different skills and strategies of the poets they read.

Before we can write poetry well, we must first read, study, and name what we notice about the poems we are reading each day. If possible, begin reading many different examples of poetry, including poems written by other 1st graders (see examples on website) a couple of weeks before starting the unit of study. At the beginning of the study, the children spend the first part of writing workshop reading, talking, noticing, and then sharing their observations about poetry. It is essential for children to develop the ability to read and name their understandings of or characteristics of the genre they wish to write. (See the lesson page for immersion)

Considerations:

Create opportunities for kids to hear and read poetry—read poems aloud to the whole class, encourage small group and partner reading of poetry, and offer independent reading time with plenty of poetry choices available. If poetry books are limited, copy poems, mount and laminate them for students to read. Such exposure and immersion encourages students to enjoy poetry, observe what poets do, and see possibilities for their own writing. Establish a poetry corner with your favorites and the students’ favorites added in. Display concrete and visual poems in the room so students see the variety of ways poets experiment with how words and letters look on the page. Record poems for students to listen and respond. Type up some of the students’ writing as the unit progresses, and integrate students’ poems in the class poetry display.

“Poet of the Day”

Students sign up a day or two in advance to read a favorite poem to the class after lunch or at the end of the day. Students practice the poem so they can read with fluency and expression. Students may team up with partners.

Poetry Notebook

Try having kids keep a special notebook or a section of their writing notebook just for poetry. In this space they can write their own poetry and copy their favorite poems by other authors. Having their own work and favorite poems close by makes it easy to go back to memorable wording and encourages kids to reread poems.

Lessons for this unit of study are adapted from Of Primary Importance by Ann Marie Corgill; Units of Study for Primary Writing by Lucy Caulkins; and Kids’ Poems-Teaching First Graders to Love Writing Poetry by Regie Routman.

FRAMEWORK FOR WRITING WORKSHOP

| TIME TO TEACH | Ongoing demonstrations are necessary to ensure that students have ideas for writing, expectations for quality, and an understanding of the elements of poetry so they apply them to their own work, and the knowledge and confidence to write independently. Demonstrations/modeling may involve one or more of the following, or any combination of these, depending on your purposes: Students are gathered up close and on the floor. The way we start the workshop should set the tone for the rest of that block of time. • New focus lesson on one aspect of poetry • Teacher thinking aloud and writing in front of students, modeling what the students are expected to do • Reviewing a previous lesson from the previous day or days before • Sharing a piece of children’s writing that supports the lesson or work we’ve been doing in genre share • Reading and discussing a poem an its characteristics • Reviewing workshop routines or ways to use materials |
| TIME TO PRACTICE | • Independent writing: time for children to think, write, and talk about their writing either with classmates or with the teacher in individual conferences or guided writing groups |
| TIME TO SHARE | • At the end of the workshop, children gather to share their work. Typically, children who share are the ones the teacher has had individual conferences with that particular day. These children share their poetry teaching points and teach the class what they learned. • Students may share completed work with peers. |

Independent Work: Explain to students that when it’s time for independent writing, the first thing they should do is reread a little bit of what you already wrote the day before. Then you have two choices. You can keep writing on the same piece or you can start a new piece. If you want to continue with the same pieces, just write the date in the margins. Model this on chart paper. Have a poster ready to remind students what they need to do.

Conferencing: Affirming Writers’ Efforts
- Circulate the room, stopping to briefly talk with students. The following are typical comments:
  - Why did you choose this topic? Tell me the story. What is the important part you want to focus on?
  - Capture and celebrate the writing “gems.” Listen and look for writings “gems” – those words or phrases that are especially powerful. When a child says or writes one, may stop and draw everyone’s attention to what the writer has done well. This should continue every day.

Assessment: What students/teacher will complete as documentation of growth
- What We Know About Poetry Writing chart (pre-and post study)
- Student work samples from beginning, middle, and end of study with anecdotal notes
- Rough and final draft work
- Reflection
- End of unit rubric

Writing Workshop Structure During Immersion (Framework is ONLY for Immersion)

WEEK ONE: IMMERSION  Most first graders have been exposed to rhyming poems. Talk about and read lots of free verse since that is what students will be writing. Point out that non-rhyming poems can also have rhythm and a beat. During the poetry writing focus, read aloud non-rhyming poetry almost exclusively.

Doing the work of writers - Continue this process (immersion) over the course of the first week. You will continue to return to mentor texts throughout the unit of study.

Mini-Lesson-Introduce new genre
Today we are going to learn how poets see the world in different, fresh, and unusual ways. We will practice seeing the world like poets because today we’re going to learn how to write poetry, and I know you will love doing it!

1. Asking/charting with students, before we begin, what do you already know about poetry? (It is okay if they do not have much to share. This is a pre-assessment to inform our instruction.)
2. Each day of this week, choose 2 or 3 poems from the mentor texts to be read and studied. T selects 2 to 3 pieces to read aloud. (Make sure the poems are enlarged for the students to see not just hear.) Revisit poetry read before. First reading, “this is a poem about…” 2nd reading-“listen and look carefully as I read this poem again.
3. Read/add in poems written by other first graders. (see website resource) The most powerful aspect of reading and discussing poems by other kids of similar ages is the unspoken message: “You can do this too.” You want students immediately to see and hear that a poem:
   - Can be about anything
   - Can use few words
   - Has a unique form and shape
   - May or may not have rhythm and a beat
   - Often ends with a punch
   - Has a title
   - May use invented spelling (if reading student’s poems-Lesson Resource)
   - Lets us know the poet
   - Is easy to create
   - May be serious or funny usually expresses important personal feelings
   - Sometimes has illustrations
   - Has lots of white space around the words

4. With the children, begin to name what they notice about the genre of poetry. “What do you notice? What did the writer do?” As the children begin to name what they’ve discovered, chart the discovery on chart paper. Always set the tone by modeling something you notice, “I like the way the poet said ‘cry, cry, cry.’ What else does the poet do?” When you are pointing out features of a poem, just look at each poem and see what you notice. What you focus on will evolve naturally from what the writer has done.

5. Try to help them name their discoveries in more specific language
   “My dad’s car makes a sound like the one in that poem!”
   Writers of poetry sometimes use “sound-effect words” to make their poems come to life. (Vrrroooommmm...Zoooooommmm!!)
   “That snake poem is written like a rattlesnake curled up.”
   Poets sometimes write their pieces in the shape of the topic to help the reader understand the poem better.
   (The snake poem is written like a snake curled and ready to strike.)

As you are noticing and discussing the whole poem, think about/comment on:

   - topic
   - word choice
   - expression of feelings
   - rhythm
   - shape
   - line breaks
   - title
   - ending line
   - special or missing punctuation

Consider:
- Read aloud poems that will inspire the rhythm of poetry (Honey, I Love: “Rope Rhyme”; “Things” “Way Down in the Music” Creatures of the Earth, Sea, & Sky: “Elephant Warning”; “The Orb Weaver”; Doodle Dandies “Lashondra Scores!”)
- Noticing/listening to how authors choose words wisely. Begin “collecting” poetic words from all genres read and charting for students to use.
- Asking students to visualize the poems as they are read. Consider having students draw a picture of what they visualize after reading the poem.
- Begin thinking about subjects/ideas they care about. Idea development starts with reading and talking and naming possible topics. Chart possible ideas.

1st Grade Poetry – Unit of Study

WEEK TWO: IDEA DEVELOPMENT Each lesson may be repeated over the course of several days with teacher modeling/writing a poem in front of the class, sharing student poems, or showing the features of poetry with mentor text.

Idea Development-From Ordinary to Extraordinary

Using a Mentor Text

“I want to write a poem like that.”

Mini-Lesson

1. Explain what a mentor text is.
2. Model the process of choosing mentor poems. “I want to write a poem like that.” Talk about how Zoe Ryder White sees the world in fresh and new ways. Put the poem on chart paper and read aloud. Remind students how she could have described the pencil sharpener in a drabber way.

   Pencil Sharpener by Zoe Ryder White
   I think there are a hundred bees inside the pencil sharpener and they buzz and buzz until my point is sharp!

2. Let students know they are going to write their poems. Oral brainstorming of topics before students begin to write ensures that most students will get started quickly and easily with their own writing. For those students who don’t yet have an idea to write about (usually just a few students) walk around and briefly conference with them to help the students get started.

   Each day before writing, ask several to talk in detail about what they think they might like to write a poem about. With the whole class “listening in,” talk with the students, asking them questions. Example;

   Who knows what they are going to write about?
   What do you want to say about …?
   How could you begin?
   How do you feel…?
   What was it like…?

Independent Work

3. Tell students the poet wrote another poem, this one about a ceiling. Ask students to look at the ceiling with a poet’s eye and turn and share their thoughts with a partner. Share the poem:

   Ceiling
   By Zoe Ryder White
   The ceiling is the sky for the classroom

4. Students share their thoughts about the poem.

Conferencing

5. Bring in ordinary objects for students to sketch and describe. “Find an interesting thing to look at and write what you see.” Conference with students, helping them slow down and write descriptions for what they see.

Independent Work

3. After one or two similar conversations about topic and word choice, kids begin to write. Ask students to skip lines to have room for changes and to date their work. Read your poem over to yourself to see if it sounds right. Speak the words aloud softly to yourself so you really hear how it sounds. Think about how you want your poem to look on the page and how you want your poem to end. If you finish one poem, start another.

   Conference one-on-one with students, helping them with their word choice and writing like their mentor poem.

Share

4. Students share their poems with a partner, then choose 2 or 3 to share with the whole group. Comment on specific, noteworthy features. For example, what a great beginning, I love the way commenting on attributes used. (repeating lines, word choice etc.) Students can share what mentor text they modeled their writing after.

1st Grade Poetry – Unit of Study

WEEK THREE: SENTENCE FLUENCY AND ORGANIZATION

Each lesson may be repeated as needed with teacher modeling/writing a poem in front of the class, sharing student poems, or showing the features of poetry with mentor text.

Sentence Fluency and Organization

When helping children organize and design their poems, focus on four elements: white space, font sizes, shape of poem, and line breaks.

Mini-Lesson

Poets make deliberate choices about the placement of their words on a page, (line breaks) so that the poem reads in a musical, logical, and poetic way.

1. Poets work hard to make their poems “sound right.” Poems have their own special music. This music of poems comes from how the words of a poem are chosen and how they are put onto the paper. Poets try to write words on the paper in such a way that readers will read our poems with music. Today I want to teach you how poets do that.

2. Engage students in several lessons using poems on a pocket chart. Use a different poem each time. Think about also using student’s poems.

3. Write a poem on sentence strips and cut the poem apart into individual words. (Use a poem that is a class favorite or has been read before.)

4. Place the words on the pocket chart to read like fiction with no line breaks.

5. Model/think aloud how to reorganize the poem so that it both looks and sounds like poetry when it’s read aloud.

Independent Work

6. Students work on their own poems, rereading, thinking carefully about their choices of line breaks. T conferences with students one-on-one.

Share

7. Students share their poems. Comment on specific, noteworthy features such as line breaks, etc. Select students who can help re-teach mini-lesson focus.

Extending the Lesson

• Students can help negotiate the placement of the words (using different poems), rereading as you go through each line.

• Choose a poem and write it in several formats. Ask children which way they believe the author selected and talk about why/how that way best supports the poem’s meaning.

Sentence Fluency and Organization

Mini-Lesson

1. Instead of a published poem, use a “poem” that consists of the word drip written on eight word cards; drop written on eight word cards and sunshine written on three word cards. Ask, “If this were a poem named ‘Sudden Storm,’ how might it go? Lay out on a pocket chart, trying different line breaks. Give students opportunities to try making different versions of the ‘poem’.

2. Help students arrange the words on the page before writing a final draft by writing each word in a box then cutting out and arranging, and rearranging in a way that looks and sounds like poetry.

4. For children who need support in the work with line breaks and how to organize their poem on the page, may find the Poetry Puzzle Support sheet helpful. Provide the poetry puzzle paper to help students arrange the words on the page before writing a final draft. Students put their rough draft alongside the poetry puzzle paper and then write each word from the rough draft in a separate box. Then copy the final draft of the poem.

• Students can help negotiate the placement of the words (using different poems), rereading as you go through each line.

• Choose a poem and write it in several formats. Ask children which way they believe the author selected and talk about why/how that way best supports the poem’s meaning.

Mini-Lesson

Poets use font sizes and types to convey a particular meaning in a poem.

1. Refer back to familiar poems to notice that some poems have only a few words or lines. Others are written in the shape of the topic. Some words show up in boldfaced print or in fancy fonts or large and small sizes. Boldfaced words in all capital letters usually signify excitement or surprise, or let the reader know that this word should be read in a strong, loud voice.

2. Take a poem that uses font sizes/types to convey meaning in a poem. Read the poem without emphasizing any words then read again (showing students how the poem is written) emphasizing the words the poet highlighted to convey a particular meaning.

3. Students talk about the differences/how the meaning changed, etc.

4. Discuss/model/use mentor text to show how white space can take the place of punctuation.

White Space Considerations

• Have you used line breaks to inform the reader when it is time to pause?

• Have you skipped lines to get the reader to stop for a longer beat?

• Have you used white space to highlight or make a word or group of words stand out?

Independent Work

5. Students work on their own poems, rereading, thinking carefully about their choices, experimenting with font sizes/types to convey meaning. T conferences with students one-on-one.

6. Students share their poems. Comment on specific, noteworthy features such as line breaks, shape, font, etc.

Extending the Lesson

• Take students back to mentor poems. Model the language needed to discuss why a poet may have begun or ended a poem in a certain way. How do the titles contribute to the meaning of the poem?
Exploring how poets write ordinary things in extraordinary ways.

Mini-Lesson

Personification

Word Choice and Voice

1. Explain how writers use tools like pen, paper, and mentor text to create their poems. They also use other important tools—things that help take something ordinary and make it extraordinary. One of them is called personification. This word means to give people or human qualities to something that is not human.

I’m going to read a poem and watch for pictures to form in your mind. This poem will give you some pretty strong images and descriptions. Let’s talk about what they make you think of as we go. (Read “The Vacuum Cleaner’s Revenge” by Patricia Hubbell. p. 14 in The dirty laundry pile.)

The Vacuum Cleaner’s Revenge By Patricia Hubbell

I munch, I crunch.
I zoom. I roar.
I sway, I sprawl.

I suck the cat hair
From the rugs.
My stomach full
Of dirt and dust
I gulp another
Pizza crust.

A tiresome life—
All work, no play—
I think I’ll swallow you today!

1. Discuss the poetic words the class has been collecting since week one. Introduce the idea of using our senses to create sensory images: sight, sound, smell, taste and touch. Read aloud poems with strong sensory images and model/think aloud about the kind of work the poet had to do to create them. (Examples: fireworks, pigeons, and barefoot from all the small poems and fourteen more.)

2. Students close their eyes as you read aloud the poem, then talk about the image created in their mind. Ask what senses the poet used to create the poem. Model/guide students’ first responses.

3. Chart lines from the poem on a chart based on which “sense” they fall under. Do the same with other poems that provide the sensory images we want to show students. See “Raw Carrots” poem under Repeating Words column.

Independent Work

4. Students work on their own poems, rereading, thinking carefully about their word choice, trying to create sensory images. T conferences with students one-on-one, supporting student’s efforts to create sensory images.

Share

5. Students share their poems. Select students who can help re-teach mini-lesson focus by sharing how they tried using repeating words.

Extending the Lesson

• Read other poems and talk about how the poet used repetitive words. Then leave out the repetitive words and ask what the students think. What effect did repeating have on the poem? Which way sounds better? Why?

WEEK FIVE: REVISING AND EDITING

1st Grade Poetry – Unit of Study

Revising: Word Choice
Poems do not have as many words as stories so authors must choose their words carefully.

Mini-Lesson
1. Students look back over the poems they have written, then select two poems they would like to spend more time on and publish for others to read. Think about whom you could publish this for. Students share with partner what poems they want to publish and who they want to publish for.

2. Today we are going to talk about the kinds of words poets choose to use in their poems. Writers are like eye doctors—they work to give their readers crisp, clear vision. Remember, a poet is also like an artist, painting a picture in the reader’s mind. Today, we will look at the words an author uses to give the reader clear, crisp 20/20 vision about their poem. Let me show you...

3. Read a poem to show students examples of a 20/20 word (active, same sound, sound-effect words) vs. blurry. Create an anchor chart:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>20/20 Words</th>
<th>Blurry Words</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• Soar</td>
<td>• Fly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Dove</td>
<td>• Jump</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Tiptoes</td>
<td>• Walks</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Independent Work
4. Ask students to go back and edit their poems, thinking about punctuation if they are using it and white space.

Share
5. Students share a place they revised their poem(s).

Revising: Using Punctuation, White Space, and Line Breaks

Mini-lesson
1. Remind/discuss how some poets use punctuation in poetry just like any other genre (show example) but that many poets use white space in the same way other kinds of writers use punctuation.

2. Look at a poem together and think about the way the poet used white space to help the reader read and understand it. White space helps create the look and sound of a poem. When we use line breaks, we create white space which tells the reader what to do. “Riding on the Train” from Honey, I Love by Eloise Greenfield is a good example of use of white space, including the last word, “sleepy.”

3. Students are also expected to check their spelling, circle words they are not sure about to correct before they rewrite it for publishing.

Independent Work
4. Ask students to go back and edit their poems, thinking about punctuation if they are using it and white space.

Share
5. Students share their thinking about their choices for use of white space. (“I wanted the reader to pause or stop or say this word slowly.”)

Editing

Mini-lesson-Editing
1. Discuss: One of the things that’s so much fun about reading and writing poetry is getting to play with our language and experiment with how our words look on the page. Poets change the size of a word, use exclamation points, or spell a word all in capital letters to create emphasis; in other words to signal a reader to read a particular word more loudly, more enthusiastically, more emphatically.

2. Model with the poems Crash & Sit from Little Dog and Duncan by Kristine O’Connell George.

3. On a chart write: “Duncan is a big dog” and “Dunca n is a BIG dog. Read the two sentences, stressing the emphasis in the second one. Do the same with the poem “Sit” looking at the exclamation mark.

4. Place another poem and walk through with students, letting them tell you what they notice about how the poet chose to create emphasis.

5. Ask students to look at the poems they have been revising and think about how the finished product should look on the page. Consider how they might emphasize descriptive words by writing them in all capital letters or using exclamation points to let the reader know they want some words read loudly. Ask them to make sure they don’t use all capitals or exclamation points on things they don’t really mean to emphasize.

6. During conferencing, ask:
   - What words did you highlight or emphasize today? Why?
   - Did you read your piece aloud to check how it sounds?

Share
7. Students share a place they revised or edited their poem.
WEEK FIVE: REVISING AND EDITING (continued)

Publishing

Mini-lesson
1. After students have revised and edited their chosen poems, have them reread thinking about adding an illustration. Illustrations often really help readers picture what the poem is saying. Let me show you what I mean. Show models from mentor texts. We’ll need to think about adding some finishing touches to our pieces.
2. Flip through some of the mentor texts and look for pictures that really tell something about the poems they illustrate. As a class, picture walk through some the poems to find inspirations for their own illustrations. Students can work in small groups or with a partner. Take a minute to think about what your illustration will be.
3. Brainstorm/model different ways to publish. Reference mentor poems. Think about paper choice, borders, illustrations etc.
4. Have a variety of materials ready for students to use.

Independent Work
5. Students discuss with a partner how they might publish their poem(s). Students begin publishing their poems. During conferences ask: What illustrations in our books inspire you? Why? What details from your poems have included in your drawings? Why?

Share
6. Students share their ideas and ongoing work.

Reflection
1. Explain how writers often think about the work they’ve done to help grow as writers. They ask themselves questions about that they have written, try to learn from the works of other poets they like, reflect on that they liked best about writing poetry or what work they liked best they did as poets.
2. Good writers think a lot about what will help them grow and become even stronger writers. They know it’s important to question the work they do and to think about their own process.
3. Show students the questionnaire, then model the process of filling it out by taking a piece of writing you did and think aloud as you answer the questions. You might also take a student through the process as a model.
4. Pick one or two questions the students might have difficulty with and have them think and talk about their responses with a partner before they go back and write them down. Have some of the students share something they learned about their partner.

Ideas for Publication and Celebration
- Have each student create a book of their individual poems by adding illustrations, collages, photos, or other art.
- Poets Tea: Invite parents, siblings, favorite teachers. Students create invitations and programs.
- Post and Perform Students go throughout the school performing their poems to someone/group they selected and leave or post a copy of the poem with them.
- Poetry Tour Students decorate their desks with artifacts depicting their poems. Other classes take a tour, stopping at different desks for students to read their poems.
- Have a “Be Proud of Your Poetry” day where students keep a poem in their pockets and find people to share it with throughout the day.

Revision and Editing

- Add written details and draws illustrations to develop topics
- Comprehends that poets use white space and line breaks to create a poem’s shape and rhythm and experiments with line breaks or placement of words upon the page
- Recognizes that poets use capitalization and exclamation points for emphasis and attempts to do same

Publishing

- Illustrates a poem and adds finishing touches to writing
- Helps plan and execute class celebration/s

Comments

- Draw inspiration from or emulates poets we read
- Observes and writes about nature, common objects, and other details of the world around them
- Comprehends that poets use rhyme and sound words to create musicality and attempts to use similar sounds
- Recognizes that poets use personification and image to bring life to their poetry and create mental pictures in readers minds
- Comprehends that poets use language that appeals to the five senses and attempts to integrate sensory details into own poems
- Demonstrates ability to select a topic from several choices and stick with it
- Comprehends that writers make decisions about structure and purpose
- Attempts to create poems modeled after the mentor text
Reflecting on My Work

Directions: Circle the face that shows how you feel about the statement.

1. I am proud of my poems.

2. I have used descriptive words to write my poems.

3. I have used line breaks and white space to shape my poems.

4. I like to read and listen to poetry.

Directions: Finish this sentence.

5. I know good poets

6. What is poetry? Draw a picture and write.
